Navigation & Limited Visibility $450

(Paraphrased from a DAN article)

For many, the love of SCUBA stems from a drive to explore foreign environments. Nowhere else on Earth can we become more lost than in a liquid, while constantly monitoring safety techniques, breathing gas, buoyancy, horizontal trim, depth and time.

Different underwater environments warrant different navigation strategies. Every diver should be able to successfully navigate and find their way back to the exit point.

Trained divers use a combination of compass, natural navigation, kick cycles and running lines along with cognitive mapping and understanding water currents.

Mar 22 (Sat) May 25 (Sun) 9:00a - 5:00p
July 27 (Sun) Sep 28 (Sun) Minimum for class is 3
Nov 8 (Sun) Nov 8 (Sat)

Limited visibility slows progress by reducing speed and kick cycles. Gently tilting your head and partially flooding your mask gives an easy reminder of which is UP. There may come a time when you must rely solely on equipment for navigation. At such times, skills practice, training and preparation are needed to navigate successfully.

Wreck & Deep >60' - $450

Overhead environments are confined spaces where a direct ascent to the surface is not possible. Never enter an overhead environment without proper training.

Using a compass on top of or inside a wreck may be next to impossible due to metal components causing deviation and faulting readings. Immediately on descent, pay attention to the physical orientation of the wreck. Mastering skills and techniques conserves energy, air and stress.

There's no shortcut to overcoming a poor skills base.

9:00a - 5:00p Feb 15 (Sat) Apr 19 (Sat) Jun 8 (Sun)
Minimum for class is 3 Aug 9 (Sat) Oct 12 (Sun)

The deeper we dive, the faster we use our breathing gas. While inside the SCUBA cylinder, the gas is affected by temperature. Surrounding pressure increases with depth.

www.harrysdiveshop.com 504-888-4882 harrysdiveshop@gmail.com

*EXAMPLE: If a tank of air lasts 3 hours at the surface, with all other conditions the same, the same tank of air would last only 1½ hours at 33' sea water.
At 66' sea water, it would last 1 hour only 45 minutes at 99 feet. Etcetera .*

WORDS of WISDOM

Having and wearing your own dive equipment is akin to sleeping in your own bed: Comfort, Familiar, Cleanliness, etc.

The answer to a problem underwater is not a choice,
it's a decision.

SCUBA equipment is life-support equipment,
NOT life-saving equipment.

The BCD will not help you float unless you inflate it.

Regulators will not breathe for you and certainly,
You cannot get air from an empty tank.

DIVERS NEED TO PAY ATTENTION and actively participate.

Becoming a certified OPEN WATER SCUBA diver is a JOURNEY with participation, effort, experience, equipment and knowledge playing a role in your success and comfort.

At Harry's, we DO more and REQUIRE more because ... you're worth it !!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
